Fuzzy, addictive hooks, throaty girl vocals, one semi-afro, and major swagger: anyone seeking a big, new, bright blip on their punk radar couldn't ask for much more. The second of a trio of self-recorded/self-released EPs, The May Fire's La Victoria delivers punch after punch of harmonically tight, consistently fresh rock tracks with very grungy appeal. And, let's face it, bilinguals do it better: Spanish lyrics make a debut in standout track "Marcha," a nod to the band's Latin roots. "I'm Sinking" gets a little moody and features some anthem-style guitar wailing, a nice contrast to the rhythm-heavy strings of the other tracks. An additional feature: eye candy. Frontwoman Catty Tasso's pout and slinky pants could make the straightest arrow consider batting for the other team. (Ahem.) Move over Karen O, The May Fire just made indie rock a lot sexier.
