Sassy pop laden rock from San Francisco garage band.

Meet San Franciscan's The May Fire. The four-piece has already garnered a sizeable fan base through extensive touring and an interview slot on MTV 3's Indie 101. They return this summer with the final instalment of their self-released trilogy of EPs, 'The List'.

Fronted by uber-cool songstress, Catty Tasso, the band possesses the edginess and breathless vocals reminiscent at times of the riot grrrl era, combined with the sort of guitar-laden, drum-driven hooks that Queens of the Stone Age would be proud of (see title track, 'The List').

Opener 'Burning Up' starts with spare guitars and snappy vocals, "The tears of fear are falling down, it's a time of lost control, the struggle is on," before kicking in for the first chorus. Raw and energetic, The May Fire keep up the pace throughout the disc culminating with Yeah Yeah Yeahs-esque 'Mother/Father'. Catchy as hell; well worth checking out.
